Technology Solutions and Dyslexia

Mike is an Independent Assistive Technology (AT) Consultant. He has been working in the field since 1985 during which time he has delivered over 2,500 AT and IT Needs Assessments for individuals with wide ranging needs including, Specific Learning Difficulties, Sensory Impairment, Physical Disabilities, Profound and Multiple Learning Difficulties, Autistic Spectrum Disorder, Speech Language and Communication Needs, Behavioural Emotional and Social Difficulties. He regularly provides one to one and classroom based training sessions on AT products as well as teaching every year on the 2 week AT Course run in Dublin and accredited by Dublin Institute of Technology.

He works with disabled children and adults in various life settings including schools, universities, home and residential care, workplace and hospitals. Before starting his own business in 2010 he was Head of Assessment Services for the Computing and Disability Assessment Service provider, AbilityNet.

During this presentation, Mike will talk about his experiences of when, and how technology has been provided to people with Dyslexia. He'll discuss with you issues like "what worked well?" "what didn't work so well" and of course "why" and "where can we go from here". He'll cover the tried and tested strategies and products as well as a few of the new products and ideas out there including voice recognition on a mobile phone!
